

They're back... and
back to nesting for the Spring.

The Swainson Hawks have already begun nesting near the Rentfrow Gym and have begun protecting their territory.

Public Awareness

The Swainson Hawks are some of the most territorial birds when it comes to breeding and nesting. People need to be warned that such birds are in their area and they need to be careful. We ask that you help spread the word of the Swainson Hawk nesting grounds at NMSU so that others know to be careful around the area.

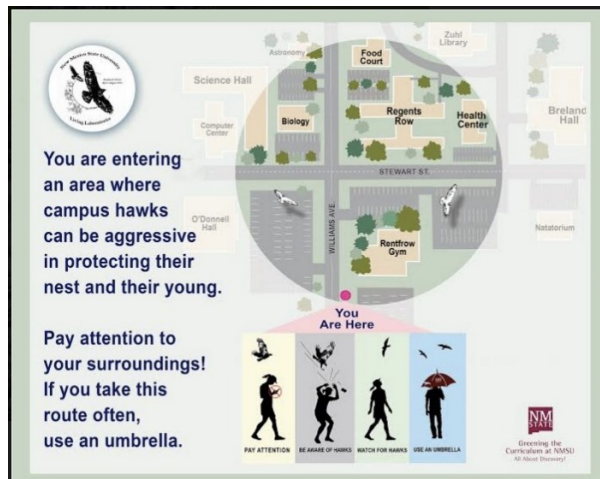

Hair can be a great nest builder for these birds so remember to protect your head from these birds. Some of the easiest forms of protection from these Hawks is to use an umbrella to protect from oncoming Hawks.

Funding

The Class lead by Dr. David Boje at NMSU would like to set up living learning centers around the Campus so that Faculty, Students, Parents, and Children can learn about the Swainson Hawks and other birds in the area. Dr. Boje would also like to set up cameras to watch the Hawks during their nesting season so that researchers can further study the Hawks from a closer perspective. The only way that we will be able to set up these cameras and centers is with the help of the community and their generous donations to the cause. For more information on the funding please visit:
